

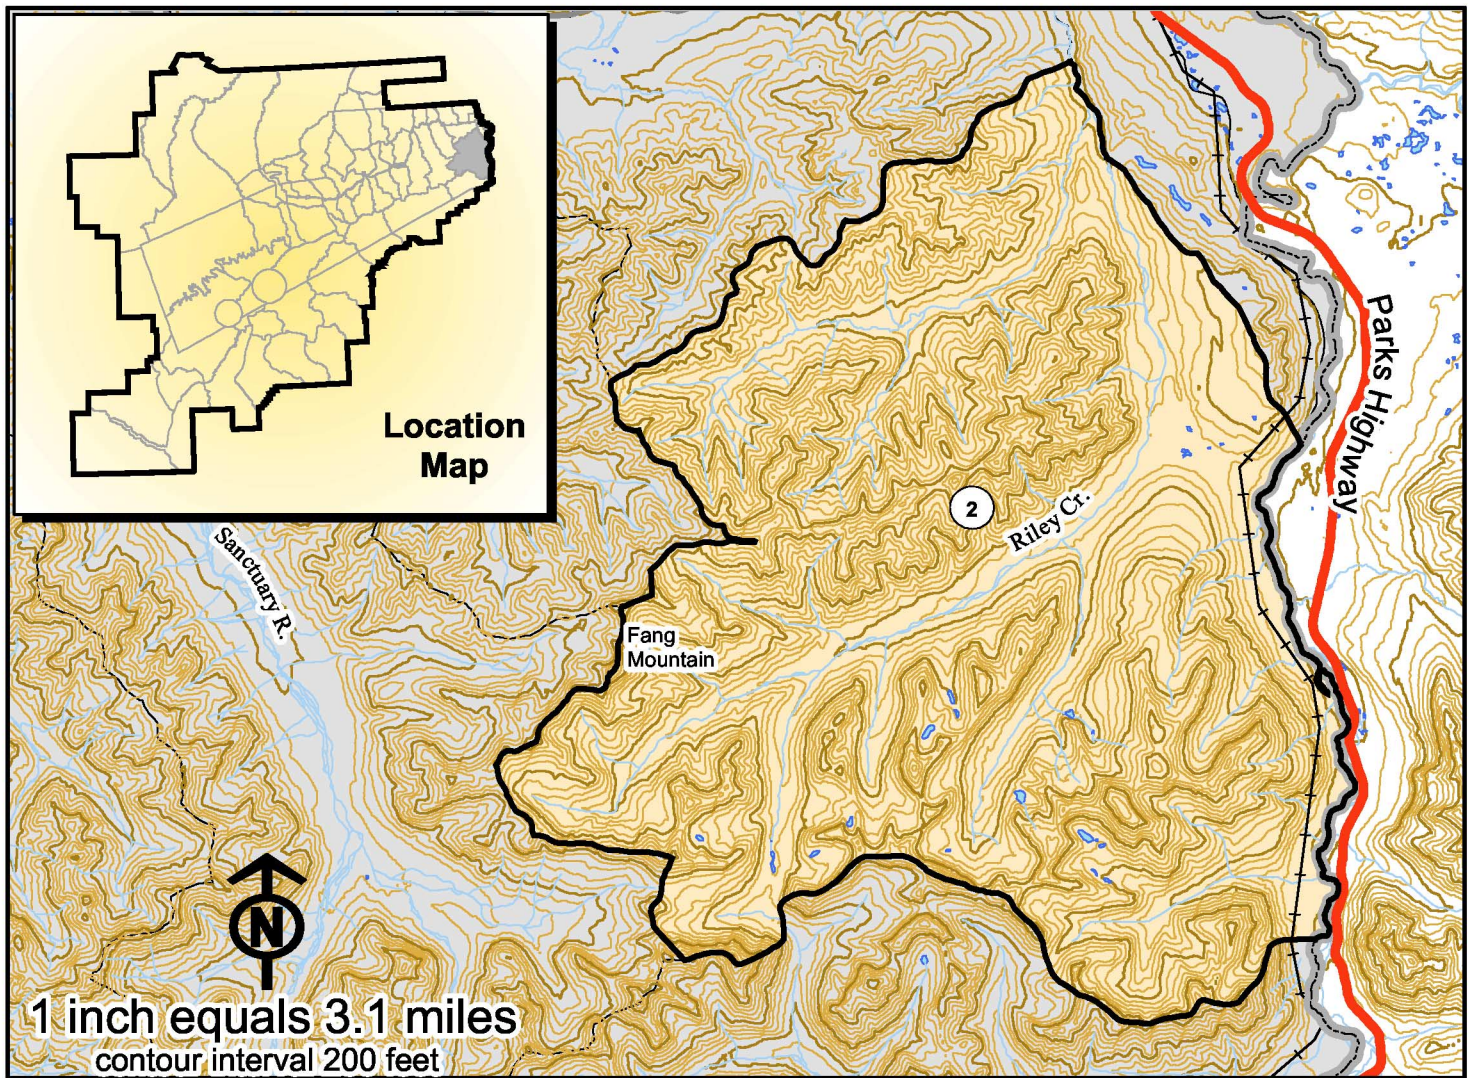

Map 2-21 - Riley Creek (Unit 2)

Riley Creek (Unit 2)

Vegetation varies from dry tundra to thick taiga spruce forest and dense low brush. Good wolf habitat. Many raptor sites throughout the region. Wilderness character is very good when not degraded by frequent overflights.

Although very close to the highway and park entrance, this unit receives little use because dense brush and swift rivers prevent easy access. Those who travel through this region have excellent opportunities for remote, self-sufficient travel; however, the central part of this unit may be more affected by air traffic than anywhere else in the park because aircraft taking off and landing close to the park entrance tend to take off one after another and fly very low.
